THE draft of the new Press Law in Japan has been published in the Akebono Shimbun, before its formal promulgation. The Japan Mail, commenting on the submission of the measure in its inchuate state for discussion, says :- " We take it that the Government is genuinely desirous of ascertaining the sentiments of the Press upon the measure before it is finally promulgated as law, and though the mode it has chosen of eliciting criticism is somewhat roundabout, it is to be hoped that the tone of the response given by the Press to the unmistakeable invitation to offer its comments will be such as to encourage many a repetition on the part of the Government of this highly commendable precedent." piece of legislation is certainly prudent. They have no Parliament to which they can submit their measures, and it is well to seek some outside criticism before making a law which may not prove acceptable. It is to be, hoped, however, that the Japanese Administration will not act like some vacillating individuals-get all the advice they can and then finally be guided by their own inclinations. Rather than that it would be better and far more dignified to disclose nothing before promulgation.

The first two clauses provide that notice of the intention to publish a paper must be given to the Home Department and a license obtained therefrom. The clause which gives the Home Minister the terms with him, but he had given her some cash privilege of suspending or suppressing entirely at his discretion, any periodical, the existence of which is "injurious to the peace of the country," is much too arbitrary, and we trust it may be modified before the draft becomes in these matters. She was asked if there had law. The Home Minister would scarcely. perhaps, on his own responsibility, suppress a paper, but Ministers are human, and it is not advisable that such a power should be vested in one man, who, if so inclined, could suppress a leading organ of opinion to gratify a mere whim or prejudice of his own. By the new law foreigners are still deharred from all connection with the native Press, and though this is, on some accounts, to be regretted, it is not much to be wondered at. The new Press laws are calculated generally to give greater freedom to the newspapers, and they will no doubt be hailed with much satisfaction by native journalists. A few amendments in some directions will, however, greatly enhance the value of the concessions made.

But the Issus he wished to place before them was this, whother the circumstences under which this oring was committed would make itamount to the grave offence of marder, or whether the jury could bring in a verdict on the leaser count of manslaughter. He quoted a passage from Archibold's Criminal Pleading to show the distinction between the two crimes, and went on to say that the duty lay upon him of showing that there was considerable prevocation. They would notice that the case depended story received most ample corroboration in many perticulars, namely, that the wounds were inflicted with the chopper produced by the prisoner and in a certain place; in point of fact all the surrounding cironmstances of the case were true. But there were some elements in the case which the woman shrank to-day from detailing to them in full, and she had done so under oir ground on which he proposed to lay the case before them. The Attorney General, in his very The German back Esmeralda arrived here moderate opening of the case, had pointed out to one who had read the depositions, she flatly contradicted that part of the story. She denied that she had been on more than speaking terms with the prisoner, and she denied, although not tions between them, but she gradually admitted in rather a hesitating sort of way that the prisoner had given money to her child. But these discrepancies in her story would lead them to avoid placing implicit confidence in the woman's truthfulness. He had clicited from her with some trouble that in order to save her reputation and the reputation of her village-for the Chinese place great value on the purity of their widows-she deliberately altered the story she had given before and supplied another motive for the orime. To do this she added all this about the bangle. There was nothing about all this in the depositions before the magistrate, and the point was so imhad it existed, especially before such an experienced magistrate as Mr. May. On the face the depositions the motive did not in the slight est degree appear to be robbery, but the motivo according to her present story was robbery. What were they to say then of a weman's evidence, on which a man's life depended, which was subject to these fluctuations. Her answer was a very clever one, that they must not expect too much from the mind of a woman on these things. But when the life of a man depended on it, they were entitled to a great deal more cure and accuracy than could be found in this woman's story. The truth seemed to be, as far as he could make out, that there had been a quarrel overnight. The witness's sister had come to this village on the 28th May for some purpose, the witness said on a visit, but he could not help thinking there was rather more in the circumstance than that. The presumption was that the sister had heard that all things were not straight, that these things were leaking out, and that the deceased thought the best thing was to come and take her sister away. However, whether that was the case or not, that was what the man thought The man's own story was that he thought the sister had come to take away the woman with until about lat. 3 S. After this the weather whom he was on these intimate terms, as he supposed, to marry her to some one else. He had more closury and so continued to 45 S. Had then, as he thought, two very grave causes of offence because he thought he was going to lese both his mistress and the money he had paid her, and over night they had had a quarrel. The lourned counsel then, with the consent of the Attorney-General, put in the prisoner's statement before the coroner. He went on to argue that with regard to the assault on the child the blows were inflicted accidentally in the struggle, the child's position or the back of the woman leading to this conclusion. Of course, he said, there was no seems that yesterday evening a labourer was The importance of these barbours is subanced excuse for the use of a weapon of this kind: working in the fields at a place named Mong Tsun from the fact that neither the southern part of it was only a question between one crime when he was startled by hearing a loud roar close the island, which is under Dutch supremacy, nor and another, and ne offered no excuse for the to him and on turning round found himself in Sarawak, possesses a good harbour. prisoner's having this chopper with him; but close proximity to a tiger. BARON OVERBECK'S EXPEDITION TO BORNEO.

It was during the year of the exhibition (1873) that our Consul General in Hongkong, Overbook, for the first time unfolded, to a circle of intimate friends and Government officers, his project for the acquisition of a considerable territory on the magnificent island of Borneo, and the outablishment there of an Austrian mercantlle station. The better informed showed a worm interest in the explanations of our energetic official, and certain intimations from high quarters led them to suppose that the Government itself was not indifferent to the subject, although Von Overbook was quite aware that for his projectas for many others amongst us—the proper moment for its realization had not yet come Would such time over come? Believing that it would. Von Overbeck last winter came to Vienna and laid his plans before a body of distinguished men composed of Government officers, and members of the learned societies and the mercantile community. Meanwhile his scheme has taken

We have before us a prospectus giving details of a project for the acquisition of a part of the island of Borneo and the establishment of a settlement there. In the introduction, the author points to the numerous advantages which Austria would derive if the proposal were corried out. Apart from the success of the enterprise of such a distant station would tend to the develonment of the navv.

"The country in south-eastern Asia which Von Overbook had at that time in view, but which is now the property of a company established by himself, consists of the northern part of the largest of the Sunda Islands (Bornes) and some islands on the northern side.

"This country has altogether an area of about 20,000 English square miles. Its boundaries begin on the east coast at about 41 deg. N going thence in a nearly straight-line to a point on the west coast about 61 deg. N The Northern islands there extend to 1 N. lat. The character of the country is on the whole hilly, some parts being mountainous The highest point is the famous Kina-Balu custody. The prisoner never showed witness a 13,400 feet high near the large lake of the same name, lying in the same country. The interior is chiefly woody; but there are partially cultivated plains of cousiderable extent between the chains of hills; for instance, the luxurious plains of the Abai river, extending from that river to. Marudu Bay-fifteen geographical miles long and from four to five miles wide. On this plain, as also on the banks of the rivers and the extensive shores of the Kina-Balu lake, one meets numerous little villages and hamlets of natives, who devote themselves to agriculture, breeding

> "The most important rivers are the Paitan Sugot, and Kinabatangan, all on the east of the acquired territory, and deep enough for large boats to mavigate. The Kinabatangan mighty river, navigable for many hundred English miles towards the interior. As in the case of the Amazone, the first settlements of the natives do not begin till 100 English miles from its mouth. On the other hand, the rivers of the north-west coast are mostly of secondary import ance, their insufficient depth permitting navigation by small boats only. "There are several excellent harbours in thi part of Borneo, amongst others, the Gaya Bay, Labakand Darwell Bay, and the port of Sandakan. Of these the first four are on the north-west coast of the island, and close to the China sea. Gaya Bay is, on account of its protected position. good anchorage, and in extent anticient to accommodate the whole of the English fleet-the most important harbour; whilst on the east coast the port of Sandakan is considered to be the best

"Like the whole island of Borneo, this part in comparison to its extent, is but thinly populated. The chief race is the Malay which, conturies ago, coming from Samatra and the Malay peninents, took possession of the island, and now Borneo are called Murats 'Ida'an or Dusuns.

Gold is found by the natives in several parts of the island; and though hitherto obtained in the most primitive way 200,000 ounces are yearly exported from Borneo. Could the anriferous mountains and districts be properly explored and worked with sufficiently hands, the result would probably be as successful as was the case in Australia and California, if not more so. Hitherto silver has been found in small quantities only; but the sand of the rivers arising at the Kinor-Balu, contains tin and even eighty-live per cent. of quicksilver, the existence of which was formerly quite unknown. Considerable ore. lodes have been discovered in the country of wather Sarawak where they are worked by an English Company. Latterly quicksilver ores have also been found in the northern part of the island; no use being, however, made of them. Antimony is found in great quantity, and has for a long time been experted to Singapore for transhipment to England. Rich fields of iron ore are also found in various parts of the country and a matter of considerable importance to the rich in precious stones of various kinds, principally diamonds, of excellent quality. They found chiefly in old beds of rivers, and do not exist in the other Malay islands or anywhere else in the Far East. The Sultan of Mambas in the interior possesses the largest stone hitherto found; it is of pure water and weighs nearly 400 earats. The most important mineral of the country is, however, coal, which is found in ertensive beds, and is similar to that of the island of Labuan. Great quantities of Bornes coal are already used on steamers in the For East; and the consumption may be expected to increase every year. Lastly, it is stated that petroleum has lately been discovered in various places and in considerable quantity. Should this statement be confirmed, this product alone would become a source of great wealth to the country; as in a very short time it was introduced into India, China, and Japan. Those countries, which now largely import it from America and Europe, would in future find Borneo a nearer and cheaper

"To make the soil yield all its treasures, many abourers would be needed ; but they can readily be obtained. The neighbouring empire of China supplies labourers of every kind, in any number, and at low wages. The articles of import which at present could be sold at a profit to the natives, -the Malays of the west and east coast and the Dusuns, Murats, and Ido'ans,-are chiefly shirtings, chintzes, red cloth, iron, brass, and steel ware of every description, glass beads, powder,

Such is the prospectus. The explanations of of Von Overbeck, whose intelligence and variet experience afford a guarantee for the carrying out of his plans, did not fail to produce great interest amongst prominent residents. The President of the Oriental Museum gave his whole attention to the subject. Immediately after the arrivatof Von Overbeck, this institution appointed a committee of savants, capitalists, and merchants to examine into the scheme. Although it addressed VICTORIA DISPENSARY. was favourably spoken of, the committee were not able to hold out any hopes of its realisation with Austrian capital You Overbeck therefore R BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE returned to London, where, we are informed o the last mail from the Far East, he succeeded in establishing an English Company to carry out the undertaking. In December last Von Overbeck again landed in Borneo, and in his capacity as representative of a large English Company entered into negotiations with the Sultan o Brunel, which ended in the cession of the whole northern part of Borney north of the Kimanis river, with the excellent harbours of the Gaya. Ambong, and Maruda Bay. From Brunsi Von Overbeck went to the port of Melmbong, where he procured from the Sultan of Sulu the transfor of his rights over the east coast of Borneo, the English Governor of Labuau and of the English Consul General for Borneo, These two concessions place the company represented by Baron Overbeck in possession of the whole 4th. For comprehensiveness and practical service this Work stands unrivalled. All the new words which the Chinese have to late years been compelled to coin to express the numerous objects in machinery, photography, telegraphy, and in science generally, which the rapid advance of foreign relations has imposed upon them, are here given in extenso. Each and every word is fully illustrated and explained, forming exercises for students of a most instructive nature. Both the Court and Punti promunciations are given, the accents being carefully marked on the best principle kitherto attained. The typography TYBURNIA, British bark, Golder.-Olyphant displays the success of an attempt to make the Chinese and English type correspond in the size | VARUNA, German bark, Sachan.-Wieler & Co. of body, thereby effecting a vast economy of space, schieving a clearness not previously attained, and dispensing with those vast margins and vacant spaces which have heretofore charac-For practical purposes the arrangement of

To illustrate the vast scope of the work, the following facts are submitted for consideration :--Chalmens' Vocabulary contains about 16,000 Chinese characters, and Medhurst's English and Chinese Dictionary about 100,000, whilst Published at the Office of the Hongkong Daily this work contains more than 50,000 English words, and upwards of 600,000 Chinese characters. Again, despite all the grammars and other elementary works as yet published, the student of this difficult language absolutely requires examples to display the various appli-cations and equivalents of different words which Of the Best Quality and at the Shortest Notice. have one general meaning. Of these examples this work contains more than five times as many as any other Dictionary hitherto published. It comprises upwards of two thousand large
